COMMENTS FROM THE OFFICE, MOLLYCKETT DAY OF THE TOWN MANAGER

The local police are having problems with disturbances, especially in the village area. An extra officer has been hired on a part-time basis to help with the patrol. Our one officer is being diverted to other sections of town allowing groups of local young people to gather which in turn attracts outsiders.

There is a group of young people, reportedly from the Portland area, who are particularly troublesome. They are part of a larger group which is camped near Bethel.

The local police, sheriff's department and State Police are well coordinated in an attempt to control these people by the use of radar, road blocks and more personnel but they cannot be completely successful due to the large area they have to cover. There will be fewer warnings issued for motor vehicle violations in the attempt to stop the speeding and reckless driving.

JULY MEETING OF HISTORICAL SOCIETY HELD AT QUINN HOME

Despite inclement weather the evening of July 7, 36 members and guests of the Bethel Historical Society enjoyed the pot luck supper and gracious hospitality of President and Mrs. Edward Quinn at their 804 Road home in Gilsum.

After a short business meeting, Tim Moore, interior decorator for the Bingham Foundation for Charity spoke on decorating and furnishing the Dr. Marcus Mason house, with emphasis on the fact that it need not all be accomplished at once, but can be an ongoing project with the purpose of recreating the style of life pursued during the years of the Mason occupancy.

Dr. Sidney Davidson also spoke and said that hopefully transfer of ownership from Bingham Foundation to the Society will be at the October meeting.

Dr. Davidson requested that all members of the furnishing committee meet with Mr. Moore Friday (July 6) for a discussion of colors to use in the house of the Quinns. The following were understood to have been present: Mrs. Rosalind Chapman, Mrs. Carol Valen, Mrs. Donald Eddy, Mrs. Elizabeth Foster, chairman, Mrs. Christian Cooper, Mrs. Robert Marshall and Mrs. Joe Foke were not able to attend.

STREET REPAIR — The Bethel Highway Department crew excavated a portion of Main Street Wednesday morning to remedy a situation caused by the high water of the June 30-July 1. Evidently the flooding conditions along the course of Sanding Brook where it passes under Main Street caused erosion of the road base. A noticeable settling of the pavement was evident Tuesday as a result of the erosion.

GREENWOOD CITY

— Mrs. Colista Morgan, Corres. —

The day was sultry as most this summer have been but we hoped for a good afternoon. In spite of the advice, "It's muggy and it's hot and there may be showers" we came and we went for a hike, it was a few weeks ago.

We left the car at an old gravel pit wondering if we could find the time town road over Bacon Hill. We started out. We found the road all right and also alders. They were every where in the road, perfect, but so were we. Some yielded to our touch and tried to climb back in our faces. We realized by now that it would be a wet hike but how wet we didn't know.

To turn back in time about 60 years: this was a road we both had traveled. Ruth, alone through a wilderness way; one and a half miles each morning and night and I, just because it was a road of that time. Once this road was just prettily shaded but now is in retrogression toward another wilderness.

Frangible things such as blueberries, twin berries, violets; whether seen or not were blooming and producing almost microscopic seeds to be on the earth, towered above by ferns and spruces. Looking about, the movement seemed to be suitable for the most rugged of seeds, the delicate and the minute.

Just ahead I saw movement by the tracks. I said, "What's that, Ruth, a deer or a moose?" Her answer, "A Moose!" At last, the only animal I ever dreaded to meet while hiking, the biggest beast in the north woods, was to take place.

I removed my glasses to wipe my eyes so that I could see better. I decided that I was more frightened of the moose than the deer so kept on. Within a few yards I asked, "What will we do if he charges?"

The reply, "I don't know." I clapped hard on my leg which because of the wetness echoed like a gun. I called at the same time, "Get out, let us by!"

Luckily, he wheeled, and went into the growth at the right of the tracks; no doubt wondering just WHAT was approaching!

We crossed the stone bridge ahead as wet as the river that did beneath. Still no let up in the shower.

Just as we left the railroad at the next crossing and turned toward the road to the car there came a tremendous flash and crack. The valley seemed to shiver. I know I did. Trees trembled and leaves rustled and pattered.

We entered the car and drove home wet and dripping but laughing at the Morgan-Hastings folly. But on second thought when, but in, or between showers, can one like this summer? But... leave out the moose next time!

Maynard Chase was a copper guest at the Hotel Friday evening. Zolpha B. Arsenault, Fay and Ann Holt were in Lewiston on Friday. Ruth Hastings, South Paris. Rena Bacon, West Paris, were callers Saturday at Lenora Holt's and Clyde Morgan's. Ann Holt visited Harry Hutton in well all the things just as if 60 years were yesterday.

We soon came to the old clearing where the house once stood. In the cellar hole a lone tree lifted its limbs high, standing there against the meadow and the forested hills.

The barn cellar wall was huge and as I remarked about its size Ruth told me many interesting things about her life there; the people, the little pond which we later saw, where she learned to skate and how she discovered their horse one day with both hind legs through the scuttle in the barn and how he was rescued. All those things were so interesting. Then our interest changed suddenly with a clap of thunder. Skies grew dark and sudden. Storm clouds swollen and slaty-blue, rose above the horizon.

Ruth knew where to go to reach the railroad so led the way. We dreaded the stretch of rails in the shower but had little choice.

Beyond the iron bridge we scrambled to the tracks and crossed it watching the river slide beneath this bridge which so often trembles with the thundering train.

The air seemed breathless and the leaves hung listless. The sky darkened. Then swish, far off, as if sudden wind in the trees on the far hills was approaching. Lightning flashed across the cloud banks. Then thunder rolled down the valley, echoing. Not a bird made a sound. Then marching down the slopes came the rain followed by a rush of wind. All was a gray, steely curtain.

Just ahead I saw movement by the tracks. I said, "What's that, Ruth, a deer or a moose?" Her answer, "A Moose!" At last, the only animal I ever dreaded to meet while hiking, the biggest beast in the north woods, was to take place.

North Haven is June! How beautiful it is! We have just returned from a few days there.

On Friday we arrived in Rockland in time to take the 1:20 ferry. Rockland is on the west shore of the Penobscot Bay. This Bay among the hundreds of indentations in the Maine coast is the largest and most important. It is about 30 miles across its entrance and nearly 30 miles long from the open ocean to the mouth of the Penobscot River. A chain of islands in the bay shelter it somewhat from the storms of the sea. It is a beautiful, beautiful bay!

The islands are spruce covered, as is the shore line. In the distance rise contours of the Camden Hills looking down on the beaches. John Smith was right when he wrote of Camden that it does lie "under the high mountains of the Penobscot, against where feet the sea doth beat."

If one looks down from the top of Baxter which is the mountain near the sea, one can see that the distance is far greater than what it looks to be from a vessel in the bay.

Leaving Rockland with an hour and twenty minutes of water beneath us gave us time to reflect on "Hiking to island life. People who go there live it for its friendly, friendly peace, and quiet. At ways and forever there is the sound of the sea. At times there is the slow lazy rumble then again a roar or pistol shot sound as a breaker crashes on the ledges. It is never really still.

Because of the character of the Maine coast it is marked with a variety of signals; bell buoys, whistling buoys, and hollow hoots. Some times they are loud while at another time ghostly and low; depending on the wind.

The bay was choppy at first but changed somewhat before our trip ended but we enjoyed every minute of it.

My brother-in-law and his ten year old grandson left in his Lapstreak boat some time before we did. They too enjoyed their trip. It was a route he had traveled so many times over the years for he is a seaman of that bay.

Traveling through the village to our friends with whom we were to stay was like traveling through gardens of lupines and roses. Everywhere color! Not in gardens, only, but fields and roadsides.

Our home looked out toward Rockland across the bay. The top of the hill beyond the house, my favorite spot, faces Camden harbor. I went there alone one late afternoon just to wander. The beach to my right with its little dry nose of sand was welcome. I sat, looked, and listened then moved over to some ledges. This time on a shelving beach the surf was breaking at my feet. I could see the rhythmic overlapping and the washing up of coils of sea weed.

Sometime Friday night there came the gentle patter of rain changing to a drumming roar later, then the churning of water from the caves. It became a wild north east storm on Saturday with strong winds and hard rains.

Sunday it cleared so we ate both our dinner and supper on the beach. Early Monday we left in the Lapstreak to go among the islands many with fascinating names. We went through Little Thetford around Indian Point to Moose Island where we stopped to dig clams. Nothing here stopped the breakers from dashing themselves to death if they dared.

We continued beyond Burnt Island and bought lobsters from a lobster boat between The Dowdall and Sheep Island. These lobsters with us morplate and boxing gloves made a delicious meal.

In the distance was Grass Ledge entirely taken over by cormorants, nesting. Gulls circled and the moment Mother Cormorant left they swooped in to destroy the young or the eggs. We witnessed this from a distance. The cormorant sits upright on rocks or posts often with a "spread eagle" pose. To me they are gawky and uncouth.

On Sloop Island we cooked and ate our lobsters. This island was in three sections with three ledgy humps and two strips of beaches. Scores of nests were on the ledges; those of the black ducks and the gulls. Most had hatched and flown. It was my first lesson of how they build and the material that they use also the color and shape of the eggs. The nest of the gull was of straw while the ducks had feathers. I took several pictures of babies and eggs but didn't stay long.

At the far end of the island the gulls rose screaming in a dancing array of ghostly wings. Off shore, the "daddy ducks" swam and uttered their deep, echoing, wood wind crooning.

In places the shells lay thick and sometimes the broken ones had the greatest beauty of form.

Harbor seals were curious and performed for us while we ate. They rejoiced in the waves, hurling themselves into gray walls of an oncoming breaker, would go through it and come up far out with heads a dark dot in the distance; then repeat.

From here we went a long distance to Compass Island where sheep are sometimes kept. The wind came up so it was cold.

and choppy as we went on home by the east end of Oak Hill, inside of Hog Island, past Mullen's Head and Mullen's Cove through Little Thetford again to the ferry landing.

Tuesday at eight we left for home on a calm sea and by all the beauty by which we had come. This time several porpoises, six-foot lengths of shining grace appeared, inquisitive, but didn't stay to be stared at.

That evening found us at home. In my mind's eye I still see red and white roses against the clear blue sea, the orderly strata of the blue sea, rocks and shells, and the dapple of the changing clouds above the Camden Hills.

"And in the blue-green distance of the pines
Glimmer the shining points of roofs
Among the sweep of mountains sketched in billowing lines.
O glorious Camden trails that lead to such a view,
They make a sight sublime who would not follow you!"
